A histologic-pathologic study of thirteen cases of epidermal dysplasia revealed that this rare condition is characterized by a progressive reduction of epidermal height, a decrease in the number of layers of cells, and a subsequent absence of any further differentiation. Ultrastructural observations revealed the presence of a goniotypic space between the outermost parts of the epidermis, and the skin appendages. This study is the first to describe a histological and ultrastructural diagnosis of such a disorder. It is also the first report of ultrast f678ea9f9e
